From the Financial Times: The Anglo-Irish Bank has been called in to cover debts of hundreds of thousands of people who have bought homes from the Bank of Ireland or Irish Nationwide, which were owned by the Anglo-Irish Bank. Many of the mortgages were purchased using misrepresentation or deception by the bank. These debts arose from property loans that were sold to several other financial institutions in Dublin. Banks have told the Irish government that they are likely to bring in an additional three billion euros of debt, bringing the total to some 15 billion euros, from the sale of these loans. The Irish government has admitted that the banks will be hit by billions more in losses as a result of this and has asked them to sell the loans to the state. Many of the country’s banks have been partly nationalised in the last year and now most of the country’s financial activity is in government hands. Both the Irish government and the Central Bank have yet to decide what criteria they will use to decide what bank is to cover the losses and what criteria they will use to decide what mortgages they will buy from them. Under the terms of the special liquidation of Anglo-Irish Bank, all debts owned by the bank are not covered by the scheme.Q: In a relationshihp between two tables A, B, do I need to fill in values in A 6d1f23a050
