=====Reduced risk of colorectal neoplasms with the reduced-energy diet: a meta-analysis of randomized controlled trials. The reduced-energy diet (RED) is a low-calorie dietary intervention that has been suggested to reduce body weight. In the context of an increased risk of colorectal neoplasms associated with obesity, the goal of this meta-analysis was to determine whether weight loss induced by RED had a beneficial effect on the development of colorectal neoplasms. A search of PubMed and Web of Science until July 2018 identified randomized controlled trials (RCTs) that compared RED with an active control group (e.g., a low-fat diet) that reported follow-up of ≥ 2 years and assessed colorectal neoplasms. The primary outcomes were incidence rates of colorectal neoplasms, and secondary outcomes were incidence rates of advanced neoplasms (high-grade or advanced

Q: Accessing a Local Table that is not on an external server I have a tblIDList that I have created that stores ID's from all of the tables on the system. I have loaded this into a form on an access database that is loaded on a machine via an application on a USB. The Id's from that table works when I have the table set as the external server. My question would be, how do I get it to work if the table is created on the local machine via the USB but still able to access it from the other machine? From my understanding there are 3 options: A) Load the table to the external server in code B) Create an ODBC connection to the non-local ODBC or C) Create a Linked Server that can just be used with a simple query to find all available data. My question is which option is the most viable, easiest to develop and maintain and reliable. I am a programmer working in C# and developing the application using Access 2007/2010 Any feedback, no matter how small, will help. Thank you! UPDATE: I am confused as to how local and external tables differ. Access creates a normal database, but only makes the tables available to refer to, when you add the tables then when you restart Access the data is created locally and available as a local SQL Server. A: Access is like a library. Use ODBC, and you connect to Access like a table which is already there. This is ODBC-over-HTTP or ODBC-
