It is well known that in simple engines, both Otto and Diesel, it is desired to use a compression ratio of about 12:1 for best efficiency. This means that the internal volume of the cylinder for a given amount of bore and stroke must be about 12 times the volume of a reference chamber. This is necessary to increase the pressure in the chamber to one sufficient to ignite the mixture and bring about combustion. This compression ratio is also often desirable for ease of engine operation and because a closer balance between the actual pressures in the cylinder and the combustion chamber is obtained. In very large engines, it is generally desirable to use a compression ratio of about 16:1. This means that the engine cylinder volume required for the same amount of bore and stroke must be 16 times that of the reference chamber. As the size of the engine becomes larger, the mechanical compression ratio is increased in order to maintain the desired compression ratio. As the engine becomes larger, however, it becomes impractical to take a compression ratio greater than 16. Both Otto and Diesel engines operate on similar principles, however, and are called internal combustion engines because of this similarity. They are divided into two broad classifications, those with a stroke greater than the diameter of the cylinder and those with a stroke less than the diameter of the cylinder. The latter class of engines are also referred to as V-type engines, due to their general shape of cylinder cross section. While the former class of engines generally have greater efficiency, the later class are better suited for very large sizes. In the larger engines, the piston strokes are greater than the diameters of the cylinders and the pistons are tilted at an angle to the axis of the cylinder. This can make for a

Quick Description of character build being discussed: You bring a number of characters with three levels of Legendary, you get to 30 points by the 5th level and once the level cap is reached, it goes up by one additional to 31 levels. For example, as a Hunter you could spend your first 5 points on Characters X, Y, and Z; get to level 2 on each, plus a Level 3 Legendary by the last Legendary (for which you could spend another 35 points). In this case I have spent 67 points; therefore the next level up is Level 6. TOPICS & BLOGS Kitten Familiar as a TFAC? To be fair you could include them as a Kitten. A very immature TNR design? Yes. A "true" design? Not at all, in my opinion, although the "immature" part definitely reeked in your post. We are talking about a fairly
