Production of interleukin-6 (IL-6) by human B cells in vitro was studied. Stimulation of cells with human IgM and complement or Staphylococcus aureus resulted in a rapid increase of IL-6 production which was maximal after 4 h of culture. Supernatants collected after 2 h of culture from IgM/complement-stimulated cells contained 16.2 ng/ml of IL-6 whereas supernatants collected after 20 h of culture contained 0.8 ng/ml of IL-6. The presence of mononuclear cells increased the amount of IL-6 in the supernatants collected from these cultures. The results demonstrate that stimulation of B cells with Staphylococcus aureus or with IgM and complement results in a rapid and transient IL-6 production. Stimulation of B cells with these agents in the presence of mononuclear cells increases the time-dependent production of IL-6 by the B cells.Q: iOS8: Alerts on first launch, Accessibility Improvements Does anyone knows what iOS8 changes will make this apps more accessible?
