www.TorontoStarReprints.com The present-day Jordan Valley is not the ancestral homeland of the Syrians of Jabal al-Summaq in northeastern Deir el-Zour. The Jordan River Valley, then, is the repository of Syrian heritage and of its primordial culture. The north Jordan Valley's cities and villages are exceedingly rich in history, evoking the stories of the descendants of the original peoples, because their cities and villages are deeply embedded in the ground. Palmyra's ruins are of inestimable value, as it was spared the ravages of the First World War and the Turks. It should be restored and brought to the attention of all humanity and the planet at large. Artists should learn from the regional and international heritage and work with local and regional artists to make the Jordan Valley a generator of stories and musical forms. Deir el-Zour's history can also be told through the water, which, according to scientists, has its own history dating back to the earliest days of the planet. The Jordan Valley water is of the same water as the seas, which are the waters of the earth, and not the water of the interior or of the earth. Article Continued Below The water in the Jordan Valley has been used for thousands of years for irrigation, agriculture, industry, the arts and for human consumption, and also for other purposes. As an example, in the books of history, the Jews, whose faith suffered extermination under the Turks, took their departure from the lands of the Jordan River Valley. The Jordan River Valley is home to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, the founders of the Jewish and Islamic faith. The present-day Jordan Valley can afford to exchange its sediment-laden water for a different source, by utilizing the ground and atmosphere as generators of diversity, through the land, and not as a source of destruction or through current artificial means. The Jordan Valley, the region and its people are the most ancient living beings on this planet, and
