Using boto is it possible to use one instance to retrieve files from s3 and other instance to upload files to s3. A: Yes. You can use the same boto instance to make multiple API calls. It sounds like you're trying to do that to me, or at least it seems like that's the only solution you've mentioned so far. Assuming that you're doing the latter, here's a client example that does what you'd like to do: `import boto s3 = boto.connect_s3() bucket = s3.create_bucket('mybucket') client = boto.connect_s3() for key in list_keys_in_bucket(client, bucket, 'my_prefix'): print '%r' % key` Q: Database Consistency I have a application that uses two databases with a 1:1 relationship. Each database has its own table for storing identifiers and information about the other database and its identifiers. Each identifier is unique, and the identifiers of databases don't overlap. The identifier of the first database is not stored as an integer, but as a string. The application has a main process that accesses the first database to fetch the identifiers that it needs and then accesses the second database to fill the objects corresponding to the identifiers in the second database. I have a question about how to handle concurrency here: If a process has already fetched the identifiers it needs from the first database, it cannot perform that query again, because the identifiers are unique. So, how can it fetch the identifiers it needs from the second database at the same time. And in what order should it fetch the identifiers from the two databases? What if the application does not properly handle concurrency, and both databases fail to update the corresponding objects, causing the application to fail. Edit There are similar questions, but I wasn't sure what
